Lewiston Journal: "Did you know that a carry nat left on the shelves two or three years would assume a fainner shape than a raise hasebull player?" said a Libe than a raise hasebull player? said a Libe life no. Here is a hat. It has been on the shelf three years, Look at it. Do you suppose I ever hought such a hear pot as that? No man ever designed it. Look at its brim. It han't whiler than the back of your jackhille. The fast is that the hats are made while pressure and hear. Left of pressure. Sometimes the brim crawls up into the crowns and sometimes the crowns exported into the brims. I've seen an obl-fashioned, flat-crowned, wider-immed hat so emphalise its precularity that in one year it became faster than a potencie and as fruity shall in one year it became faster than a principle and as fruity shall in would break up a revival exercise. HOW HE TESTED IT

There was a man in Kansas City last week, who wanted to find out in a practical manner just what sort of money was really preferred by the merchants of the town. He went to a Jeweler, a pronounced goldbug, and bought a ring for his wife. It was ten dollars. He took out a ten dollar gold piece and ten silver dollars and told him to take either. The goldbug took ten silver dollars because he needed change. Then the man went to a dry goods store and bought his wife a dress. The D. G. man was a silverite. The dress was $29,88, reduced from $27.64 on account of the early Saturday closing. He gave the merchant his choice of the exact change in silver and copper, or thirty dollars in gold. The merchant took the gold and gave back change. He had too much small change. He went to a shoe store and bought his wife a pair of shoes for $2.50. This man was a bimetallist, and when offered gold or silver he asked for paper money, it was so much easier to put in his safe. Then the man went to a confectioner's and bought his wife a dollar's worth of candy and did the same old trick, offered a gold or a silver dollar, and the candy man asked him for small change. Then the man went to a saloon, and when he got done drinking the bartender took all he had, $11.09, and he went crazy and died. The only ones who made anything out of his investigation were the wife and the bartender. She got rid of a foolish husband and the bartender got all but the 9 cents that he put in the till. Moral? You've guessed it. Buy a new self-faced, pure worsted serge suit here to-morrow for $6 and go catch the widow.
